EXTRAMURAL GRANTS:

PI. Gates Foundation. Movements, Markets and Transnational Networks: Feminist Protest and Women's Economic Empowerment Worldwide. $449,005 (2017-2020).

This project develops a global database of domestic and transnational women's movements and organizing for the period 1975 to 2015. It explores the relationship between such organizing and women's economic rights, comparing them to other areas of women's status, including violence against women. An article published in International Studies Quarterly (2022) describes the database.

PI. American Jewish World Service. Women's Protest Activity in the Global South: A Study of Feminist Movements in Africa, Asia and Latin America. $29, 945 (2017-2018).

This project developed a database on domestic women's movements, backlash and repression in more than a dozen countries where AJWS works.

PI. Mellon Foundation. Breaking Through: Developing Multidisciplinary Solutions to Global Grand Challenges. $750,000 (2016-2019).

This project developed a unique approach to interdisciplinary research, scholarly publishing and communication on global grand challenges. The approach is unique in two ways. First, it catalyzes the involvement of humanists and social scientists in grand challenges research. Next, it embeds publishing professionals, libraries faculty and policy experts in the scholarly communication process. The program enabled interdisciplinary teams to tackle grand challenges with expert assistance in communicating results directly to the public and stakeholders. For more information see the project webpage: <https://www.purdue.edu/breaking-through/index.php>.

PI. National Science Foundation, Political Science Program. Workshop: Informal Institutions as Solutions to Intractable Global Problems (with Leigh Raymond, Dan Kelly, Ann Marie Clark, and Ximena Arriaga). $37,000. (2012)

This workshop convened an international, interdisciplinary group of scholars to synthesize work on informal institutions and norms across disciplines in order to illuminate new solutions to global problems, focusing on food security, climate change, and women's human rights.

PI. National Science Foundation, Political Science Program. States and Sex Equality: Why Do Governments Promote Women's Rights? $237,000 (2006-2011); Supplemental grant of $42,000 awarded (2009-2011) (with Mala Htun).

This project developed a new theoretical framework to explain why national governments adopt different types of sex equality policies through multi-country fieldwork and the creation of an original cross-national dataset. The dataset covers women's movements and six policy areas in 70 countries representing all world regions, levels of development, and degrees of democracy from 1975 to 2005. Fieldwork was conducted in China, Israel, India, Nigeria, Malaysia and Argentina. This research formed the basis for the Cambridge University Press book The Logics of Gender Justice, which won the ISA's award for best book on Human Rights (in 2019). It also formed the basis for six articles, a book chapter, and two background papers, one for the World Bank's 2012 World Development Report and another for UN Women's The World's Women.

PI. Canadian Studies Faculty Research Grant, Government Policy on Violence Against Women in Canada. Government of Canada. $5,000. (2002)
